

GEMINI NEW MOON

A new global agenda is becoming evident as the Pluto-Saturn conjunction narrows and approaches exactness. The nodal axis also being involved speaks to the importance of the connections and commitments we make at this time, both at a personal level, and in our relationship to the wider world.

With Mars in Cancer as well, about to oppose Saturn and Pluto and join the nodal axis, there is likely to be a heavy workload to attend to, with a number of additional responsibilities over and above the norm.

The coming month is likely to be focused on the tasks and duties we have to manage so it's important to be organised. Schedules and agendas will be helpful in managing your to-do list.

Gemini New Moons are often hectic and full of social activities as well, so it will be vital to pace yourself and manage your time well.

Pluto's involvement with Saturn tells us that this is a time for restructuring. That may mean letting go or delegating as well as starting fresh.

Every conjunction, especially major ones like this are a time for new starts but are also the end of a long cycle as well. Endings and beginnings characterise the coming few months.

SAGITTARIUS FULL MOON

The intensity ramps up at this Sagittarius Full Moon, just days out from the June Solstice.

There are powerful oppositions active in this chart and in the Solstice chart.

The Saturn-Pluto conjunction engages with the Nodal Axis, with Saturn only a degree away. These key stellar players are opposed by Mercury, Mars and asteroid Pallas Athena. At the same time Jupiter and the Moon will be shining brightly close together, and Neptune is squaring Jupiter almost exactly.

All this points towards this being a very full on Full Moon. On the one hand it signals some enjoyment and fulfilment, but the tendency to escape from responsibilities is high. The responsibilities we have committed to may be felt to be onerous, or impossible to manage.

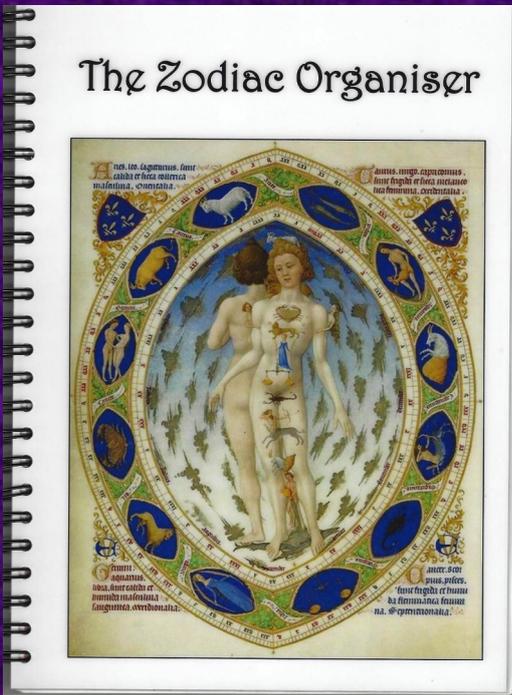

Time gets away quickly and yet there are still many duties to perform. In the end, some may simply decide that it's all too hard. Delegating may be a good option, provided that we can find the right people who are responsible.

It's important now to strike and balance between home and work duties. There will be much to attend to.

OPPOSITION ASPECTS

There is also a Venus-Jupiter opposition in this Solstice chart, which adds to the self-indulgent and escapist tendencies of the stationary Neptune.

Opposition aspects often play out in relationships, not just with our significant 'other' but with all kinds of relationships, including family connections and business associations.

Signs that oppose one another are of compatible elements, but have the same quality. Signs of the same quality are in conflict as they evoke tense square and opposition aspects. As a rule oppositions are easier than squares as they do have compatible elements.

But cardinal opposition aspects Cancer-Capricorn and Aries-Libra, stir conflicts associated with our commitments. Cardinal signs like to take the initiative and make decisions. They are also signs of leadership, so cardinal conflicts tend to play out when we have over committed ourselves, or when our personal agendas conflict with those of others, or we have two competing options that we cannot prioritise. Sometimes we over-commit ourselves.

Fixed sign oppositions Taurus-Scorpio and Leo-Aquarius can deteriorate into fixed feuds, where neither party is willing to compromise or give ground. This can result in considerable tension and a stalemate situation.

Mutable oppositions, Gemini-Sagittarius and Virgo-Pisces are somewhat less stressful, being of the mutable element which is more adaptable, however they can result in misunderstandings and confusion. Lines of communication can become crossed and things can get a bit crazy.

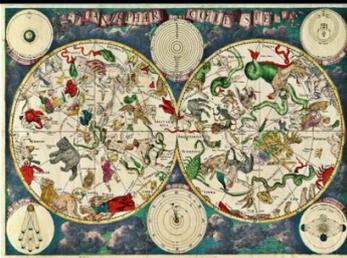

When we have opposition transits such as the many that are in this Solstice chart, we are often pulled in two or more directions at once. Competing values and priorities, misunderstandings and relationship problems can arise. This chart does not have any fixed oppositions, so the challenges inherent in this Ingress are more manageable than they otherwise would be.

The key to managing oppositions, be they natal or transits, is to communicate and listen. Be open to different ideas and perspectives.
